Jason holds an LL.M. from Georgetown University Law Center, specializing in cybersecurity, digital forensics, and electronic discovery. His advanced training complements his practical experience with cases involving classified information, digital evidence, and national security law.

Throughout his career, Jason has defended clients in high-stakes cases, including representing Major Jason Brezler, a Marine reservist and New York firefighter, in a two-year administrative proceeding that resulted in his retention in the Marine Corps. This case, covered by The Washington Post and The New York Times, involved critical digital forensic evidence and exposed unlawful retaliation by senior Marine Corps officers after extensive APA litigation in federal court.

Jason also leads the defense of Navy SEAL Captain Brad Geary, who was scrutinized after the death of a SEAL recruit during Hell Week. Jason's defense, featured in Fox News and The New York Post, challenging the Navy's investigation and systemic issues within Naval Special Warfare and the Navy writ large.

Jason's work spans not only administrative and trial defense but also federal criminal and appellate matters. He has represented clients in serious cases involving charges like murder and sexual assault before the Navy-Marine Corps Court of Criminal Appeals, the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, and the Supreme Court of the United States. As one of the longest continuing serving active-duty defense attorneys, Jason has appeared in some of the most significant cases within the military justice system, including the representation of individuals accused of planning the 9/11 attacks and the U.S.S. Cole bombing.

His litigation expertise has also been central in handling military commissions cases, where he managed complex digital evidence, discovery, and appellate strategies. Jason's practical experience across these areas has made him a sought-after consultant on national security and cybersecurity litigation.
